Phone in a Pod

Oricom's latest collection of design driven cordless phones, to be launched in May, are as vivid in colour as they are vibrant in technology.

Employing interference free DECT 1.8GHz technology the M900 collection offers long range clarity with maximum voice security.

Available in fire red, black pearl and blazing blue their slim form and gently curved European styling is reminiscent of a Lotus (car not flower), parked comfortably in individual communication pods.

With integrated digital answering, hands-free speakerphone, secure clarity of over a quarter kilometre, elegant blue backlit display and a myriad of other intuitive features, M900 is the perfect melding of European design and technology for the Australian home.

"Our research has determined that many consumers are tired of drab looking over complicated home phones", explains Oricom Managing Director Kevin McDonnell; "they want something that has some life to it, while making their lives easier."

"We continue to unify our expertise across communication segments including domestic, recreational, baby and aged care, in order to develop products that are technically exact, robust, instinctive to use, well supported and design orientated; the M900 collection being a perfect example."

Available as a twin pack, expandable for up to five handsets, M900 is available from major retailers and will retail for $99.
